The President and the Cabinet.

When Gen. Taylor's victories on the Rio Grande and at Monterey had won for him a large share of public admiration, there were those among us who immediately set to work to turn his persona popularity to their own private accountmake him a candidate for next President, was the natural and ready suggestion-so natural that dozens claim separately the merit of originating it, and each truly so far as regards himself-that is, he did not borrow the idea from any other General's convictions on the great Political questions which had convulsed the country-none asked whether his opportunities and acquirements had been such as to fit him for the Presidentia; chair. They simply 'went in to win,' and pushe Gen. Taylor just as they would have bet thei money on a horse that they supposed most likely to win a race, without knowing or caring any thing more about him.

These originals were generally men very loose ly attached to either of the great parties-many of them did not profess to belong to either. The tried to place Gen. Taylor on their own ground and for a time were not wholly without success Of course ' the independent press,' (for such is the self-assumed designation of that portion of the estate of journalism which conceals its opinions on the most important public questions or takes care not to have any) - was to a great extent put without effect. And yet all the force that could have been drawn together for the support of Gen. Taylor could not have given him the first Electoral Vote-could not have made him stronge in the canvass than Martin Van Boren-had no the Whig National Convention, upon the publi assurance of the Louisians Delegation that he was every inch a Whig and would abide the choice of the Whig Convention, adopted and presented him as the Whig candidate for President. And these assurances were more than confirmed in letters written by Gen. Taylor before the close of the canvass.

Gen. Taylor was elected, but, to the chagrine the originals, elected as a Whig. Nineteen twen tieths of all the votes cast for him were cast a Whig votes: at least nine-tenths of the whole were so cast because he was a Whig and the Whig candidate. The 'independent Taylor men, the King's friends, had been dwarfed by the very success of the movement they had initiated The President they had helped to make was a Whig in principle and feeling; the Members of Congress chosen to sustain his Administration were, almost to a man. Whige; he had no choice but to form a pure Whig Cabinet, and desired no other. Every man elected or thought of by him to take charge of a Department had for years been known as an active and ardent Whig. In filling the subordinate stations, quite a num ber were awarded to the 'ladependents,' as was just; but not near so many nor so important postdiscovery of Gen. Taylor's Presidential qualities They thought themselves entitled to the lion's share, but it was neither practicable nor just to fulfill their expectations. Hence, disappointmen chagrin, and disaffection. Every 'original,' who has not been tendered a fat office or job considered himself an illused man. This is unfortunate, but i was inevitable. It was not possible to buy the entire cab-load at their own estimate and sell then at their market value without realizing a very se rious loss by the operation.

Hence coldness, sourness, disaffection in the Administration ranks; hence a furious and mos envenomed onslaught by the 'independents' o the members of the Cabinet. It would not look well for Taylor men par excellence to head an as sault thus early on Gen. Taylor; they can only flog him with decency over the backs of his Cabinet. Its members are all Whige, and, though most of them enlisted pretty early in the suppoof Gen. Taylor, they went in as Whige and not as independents. Each original is at liberty to pro sume that, but for the interposition of such a Cab acknowledged in the bestowal of a Foreign Mis sion, a Marshalship, or a fat contract at the very least. It was not possible for the Heads of De partments to avoid the hatred of these gentlemen save by acceding to their inadmissible demands and completely Tylerizing the Administrationmaking its supporters a purely personal and case ual aggregation of moths around a Military car dle, which their selfish flutterings would be very certain soon to extinguish. -We state these facts and considerations in n spirit of devotion to the present Cabinet. We thought, last March, the selection of its member might have been considerably improved; we think so still. The location of so many of them within a few hours' ride of Washington, while but one halled from westward of the Allochanies and none from the west of the Miami, was unfortunate Should a vacancy at any time occur, we trust the fair claims of the Great West will be then recor sidered and respected. We do not discuss the propriety of retaining the present Cabinet as a unit' to the close of the Administration-the Pres ident will see to that. So long as the present Heads of Departments prove useful and accepta ble to him, they will of course be retained, we trust there is no man among them who would desire to stay a moment longer. But this clamor raised against them through the 'independent' journals is excited by their (or rather, by Gen. Tay lor's) refusal to Tylerize the Whig party and dis tribute the offices almost wholly among the little set who claim to be the original, the genuine, the nonpareil Taylor men. Nobody who understands the matter will think the less of the Cabinet for these attacks, however savage and reckless-non could well avoid liking them better on this acopen to them than that they have pursued. But there obviously was not

The gross imputations on Gen. Taylor's unde standing and resolution implied in these attacks on the Cabinet cannot have escaped notice. The President nominated his Ministers; he is responsible for their sots; he cannot efficiently and suc cessfully perform his own duties if they are no qualified and disposed to render him the best pos sible assistance. To charge them from day to day with incapacity or want of integrity is in effect to charge him with idiocy or cowardice. If they ra dically dissent from his views, or if they prove in competent to second and enforce them, it is his duty to dismiss them and choose fitter and more com petent successors. To say that he does not know when he is ill served, or dare not apply the obvi ous remedy, is to charge him with gross incapac ty and pusillanimity. For such charges there is no foundation, and those who assail the Cabinet. and invoke the defeat of the Whig party because of its alleged misdeeds, are at best full of malice against the President himself, and only await a favorable opportunity to manifest it. They would gladly whelm President, Cabinet and the party sopporting both in one general ruin, and it is to that end they are now working - With what suc cess, time will show.

A Good ARGUMENT.—The season for coughs is now sp on us, and it behooves us all to look well to our health A cough is but the premonitory symptom of that dies die case, so prevalent in this climate, consumption, and any latter, probably, is far the greater number, and it becomes the part of wisdom, therefore, to use those of knows and tried virtue. With this view, we can safely recommend the preparation of Mrs. JERVIS, known as the Cough Cas dy. It is soothing in its effects, and by relieving the brou-chial passage, allays inflammation and stops the progres of disease before it has time to reach the lungs.
